Subject: Taking out supplemental German health insurance

German nationals living in Belgium who have statutory health insurance and a bank account in Germany are not able to benefit from supplemental dental insurance if they go to a dentist in their country of origin. If they were to live in Germany, they could take out this coverage. German insurers are only permitted to operate in other EU Member States if they provide notification to that effect in accordance with the Insurance Supervision Act.

1. Does this convention constitute discrimination against German nationals living abroad under, for example, Directive 2011/24/EU?
2. Could this issue be settled by means of an exception under an insurance by correspondence scheme?
