The Russian Federation does not share the names of those individuals on whom it has imposed sanctions, either publicly or with the EU institutions.

In April 2021, the Russian Federation did exceptionally publish the names of eight officials from the EU and Member States it had decided to ban from entering the country. In response, the President of the European Council, the President of the Commission, and the President of the Parliament issued a joint statement¹, as did the High Representative/Vice-President².

The EU remains of the opinion that such countersanctions are groundless and lack legal justification.
