In the Farm to Fork Strategy, the Commission has announced a proposal for harmonised mandatory front-of-pack nutrition labelling (FOPNL) at EU level\(^1\). The Strategy does not recommend any specific type of FOPNL scheme and, at this stage, no choice has been made.

The front-of-pack nutrition labelling proposal will take into account scientific advice, the consultation of Member States and stakeholders and the results of an impact assessment. The impact assessment will in particular assess the impacts of the policy options on specific sectors\(^2\).

This initiative will specifically address nutritional aspects. Any environmental dimension of food production will be considered in a parallel initiative i.e. the sustainability labelling framework, which will govern the provision of information to consumers relating to the sustainability of food products regarding among others their environmental and social aspects. The legislative proposal is foreseen to be adopted by the end of 2023. It will be preceded by an in depth impact assessment, where the public, Member States and stakeholders will be thoroughly consulted, and which will consider, \textit{inter alia}, possible impacts on the organic sector.
