to the Commission
Rule 138
Lina Gálvez Muñoz (S&D)

Subject: Price revision formula

Research projects administered by the Commission provide for a non-repayable grant for a percentage of the total established expenditure over the entire project (depending on the type of aid approved) of less than the initially approved budget. In the light of this:

1. If, as is currently the case, a crisis in the availability of materials disproportionately inflates their prices, can research organisations apply for greater funding, even if this would exceed the initially granted budget?
2. If not, could a price review formula be included in new calls for proposals to offset these cost increases that were unforeseeable at the start of the project?
