to the Commission
Rule 138

Subject: The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation has reportedly used Haiti to create a market for cholera vaccine

According to Professor Renaud Piarroux, a world expert on cholera, Bill Gates owns cholera vaccine factories in South Korea. For its part, the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation reportedly organised a vaccination campaign in Haiti as the cholera epidemic was coming to an end.

This large-scale trial of the single-dose vaccine, supported by a contribution of EUR 10 million, was organised using bogus publications and modelling without clarifying that cholera had disappeared in Haiti two years earlier. The aim seems to have been to gain support and create a market for the cholera vaccine<sup>1</sup>.

In 2018, the Commission announced that it was jointly investing nearly EUR 100 million<sup>2</sup> in health in Africa with the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, despite Microsoft laying off 25 000 European workers.

1. Has the Commission investigated the veracity of these disturbing revelations about the unnecessary and experimental vaccination of the Haitian population organised by the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation?
2. Will the Commission separate its health activities and funding from the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation?
