

Question for written answer E-003866/2022
to the Commission

Rule 138

Rovana Plumb (S&D)

Subject: Road transport operators

The European Union's decarbonisation plans for road transport will only be successful with good timing and appropriate incentives. Vehicles, fuel infrastructure and fuel availability need to be considered together. The deployment of intelligent transport systems will play an important role in the establishment of a European mobility data space. Road transport operators need a motivating stimulus to initiate the transition, including through smart taxation and gradually introduced charges.

Could the Commission share with us some concrete proposals in this regard for road transport operators?

Submitted: 29.11.2022