to the Commission

Rule 138

Subject: Literature helps to take us back to our roots

Regional literature represents barely 1% of the overall publishing market in France. However, it is part of one of the sectors resistant to crises. This literary genre includes the stories and legends of France's different regions, dealing with tradition and heritage. These texts appeal to the peoples of Europe, who wish to reconnect with their roots.

With Europeans spending more and more time in front of screens at the expense of books, does the Commission intend to support and promote this form of folk literature?
