Rule 138
Engin Eroglu (Renew)

Subject: Mutual recognition of eco-stickers

Several Member States of the European Union have introduced environmental or emission stickers in addition to toll stickers – this is the case for Denmark, Spain and Germany but also Norway. They are used to regulate vehicle access to various low-emission zones.

This can entail a considerable administrative burden for EU citizens travelling within the Union. In addition, in practical terms, it may be difficult to find enough space on the windscreen for all the eco-stickers along with the toll stickers. The common emissions standards in the EU mean that comparability for cars within the EU should not be a problem.

1. Is the Commission planning to implement a common system of eco-stickers or rules for the mutual recognition of eco-stickers throughout the EU?
2. If not, why not, and what alternatives does it envisage?
