Subject: Terrorist threats in the context of new refugee crises

Recent events in Europe, including the terrorist attack in Brussels, are raising serious concerns about the increase in terrorism and radicalisation in the European Union. The conflict in Gaza and regional tensions are contributing to these problems, and social unrest is reaching alarming levels. A significant influx of refugees is expected in the future, causing concerns about the possibility of terrorist infiltration.

1. What measures are being taken by the European Commission to combat the spread of radicalisation in the European Union?
2. Is the Commission ready to deal with new refugee crises, and what measures is it considering?
3. How will the free movement of EU citizens be affected if some Member States suspend the full implementation of the Schengen Agreement?
