

Question for written answer E-001046/2024
to the Commission

Rule 138

Loucas Furlas (PPE)

Subject: Need for more active involvement of non-EU countries in the Cyprus issue

For the past half-century, the Cyprus issue has been and remains an unresolved regional case of invasion and occupation.

It is an infringement of the acquis communautaire and violates the resolutions of the UN Security Council.

More active involvement from the EU is essential and important steps are being made in this direction. However, non-EU countries such as Britain, which is closely concerned with the Cyprus issue and the security problem, also need to be more actively involved.

In view of this:

Is the Commission putting pressure on Britain to do more for the resumption of talks and the pursuit of a fair and viable solution?

Submitted:9.4.2024