F a. whereas disability is a social construction and according to the social model of disability:

- Impairment is a physical, mental or sensory functional limitation within the individual.

- Disability is the loss or limitation of opportunities to take part in the "normal life" of the community equally with others due to physical and social barriers. Therefore, the term 'disabled people' defines "people with impairments who are disabled by socially constructed barriers"; furthermore, the term 'people with disabilities' refers to the disabling that effect rests within the individual person rather than from society. The term 'disabilities' when used in this context refers to a person's medical condition and thus confuses disability with impairment. In addition it denies the political or 'disability identity'
