Subject: Burden-sharing or common European solutions concerning an increased greenhouse-gas emissions-reduction target for 2023

Would a higher 2023 climate-neutrality target (e.g. 55 or 60%) be obtained primarily via increased national burden-sharing targets in the non-ETS sector or through a mix of different actions at EU level, including a review of the ETS and the Energy Taxation Directive, and possibly Europe-wide regulation of agricultural emissions? If a solution is being considered that combines the two approaches (burden-sharing and action at EU level), how will that solution be divided between the two approaches?
