Debate on Europe Berlin

10 November 2014, Allianz Forum Berlin: Europe at a turning point – How to overcome the new dividing lines?

Europe has reached a turning point. The European Union has been responding with disagreement when confronted with the poly crises (Edgar Morin) which have had an impact on the entire union. The economic and financial crisis has divided the Eurozone into North and South. Due to regional instabilities and an increased influx of refugees from Africa and the Middle East, southern European countries often feel isolated. Further, reacting in mutual agreement to the use of force by Russia in the Ukrainian crisis has proved to be a challenge for the EU. Can these current crises offer an opportunity for the EU to come together in a rapidly changing global world and finally overcome old-fashioned nation-state thinking? How can economic and political integration be strengthened? What about TTIP and the future of the transatlantic community? How can the European military capabilities be pooled and shared more efficiently? How can the EU speak as one voice in international fora, such as the UN or the IMF? Could a permanent EU seat in the Security Council of the United Nations be a solution?
