Marva Corley is a Senior Economist at the International Institute for Labour Studies (IILS) at the International Labour Office (ILO) in Geneva where she is the Team Leader for the Globalisation, Competitiveness and Enterprises team. She researches extensively on issues impacting employment, labour markets, and economic development. Her research provides useful evidence based analysis for policy makers in both developed and developing economies. Prior to working at the IILS, Ms Corley was an Economist at UN/DESA, the United Nation’s Department of Economic and Social Affairs in New York, where she was the regional coordinator for the developing country group, working on the UN’s World Economic Situation and Prospects report. She has worked in academia at Birkbeck, University of London and at the government level for the United States’ Department of Labour in Washington, DC. She holds a PhD in economics from Howard University in Washington, DC and has published widely on productivity, wages and conflict issues in working papers, edited volumes and academic journals.
