EU Public Prosecutor to better protect taxpayer's money

MEPs are set to give the green light to establishing a European Public Prosecutor's Office to step up the fight against fraud and misuse of European funds and protect taxpayers' money.

The European Public Prosecutor's Office (EPPO) will be in charge of investigating, prosecuting and bringing to justice those committing offences against the Union's financial interests.

Currently, only national authorities can investigate and prosecute EU-related fraud, but their jurisdiction ends at their national borders.

Since 2014, MEPs have pushed through several resolutions to establish the EPPO and have stressed the importance of ensuring the independence of its prosecutors.

Quick facts

The EPPO will be set up in enhanced cooperation among 20 member states: Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Estonia, Germany, Greece, Italy, Finland, France, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Portugal, Romania, Slovenia, Slovakia and Spain. Other member states may choose to join at any time.

The EPPO central office will be based in Luxembourg, but each member state will appoint at least one delegated prosecutor located nationally.

The list of serious crimes that fall under the jurisdiction of the EPPO could be extended in the future to include, for example, terrorism.

Once Parliament has given its consent, the Council will formally adopt the regulation on the EPPO. It will take at least three years before the EPPO can begin its work.

Preventing cyber-attacks and online sexual abuse

The increase in cybercrime and the inadequacy of measures to prevent attacks on critical infrastructure or sexual abuse online demand firmer action.

MEPs want public and private investment in cybersecurity and education together with greater cross-border police cooperation and exchange of information. A resolution will be debated on Monday and voted by plenary on Tuesday.

About 80% of companies in Europe have experienced at least one cyber security incident, many of which go undetected or unreported. MEPs also point to global ransomware attack “WannaCry” of May 2017, which affected thousands of computers in nearly 100 countries and numerous organisations, including the National Health Service in the UK.

Passenger ship safety update

To maintain the world's highest level of safety for sea travel, the EP is set to modernise EU passenger ship safety rules in a vote on Wednesday.

The new rules will:

- speed up transmission of passenger data to the rescue services and families in the event of an accident,
- remove overlaps and loopholes in safety inspections of ferries and high speed craft,
- include aluminium ships to comply with common EU ship safety standards.

A 2015 evaluation confirmed that current EU passenger ship safety rules are meeting safety objectives and accident statistics ranked EU waters among the safest.

To ease the administrative burden on ship owners, clarify overlapping rules and respond to technical progress in the sector, the Commission proposed updating and simplifying those rules in 2016, without compromising on safety standards.

Parliament and Council agreed on modernising three directives on passenger registration, technical standards for ships used to offer domestic passenger services and inspections of roll-on/roll-off ferries and high-speed craft in June.

Quick facts

In 2014, the total number of passengers embarking and disembarking at EU ports was estimated at 400 million, of which 120 million passengers travelled between ports in a member state.

EU legislation on passenger ship safety complements international and national standards, provides for safer ships and more efficient handling of ship accidents.

Ships on international voyages (including between two member states) have to comply with international conventions and certain EU rules, while ships on domestic voyages (between ports of one member state) have to follow EU and national rules.

Better conditions in prisons to favour rehabilitation and prevent radicalisation

EU countries must improve conditions in prisons and address overcrowding to protect inmates' health, favour their rehabilitation and prevent the risk of radicalisation. MEPs defend alternatives to imprisonment when convicts do not present a serious danger to society, in a draft resolution to be debated and put to the vote on Thursday.

Background

In 2014, prisons across the EU held over half a million inmates, including both those serving their final sentence and persons accused of a crime awaiting trial. According to the Council of Europe, the number of detainees exceeds the number of available places in a third of European penitentiary institutions.

Stopping child marriages

MEPs will quiz Federica Mogherini on EU efforts to stamp out early and forced marriages and protect girls against abuse and violence. Tuesday's debate will be wrapped up by a resolution to be voted on Wednesday.

Members want to know how the Commission:

- assesses the impact of projects and campaigns designed to combat child marriage in third countries,
- ensures the protection of the rights and health, including sexual and reproductive health, of all children in EU member states and third countries
- addresses the issue of child marriage amongst refugees and asylum seekers.

The EU signed the Istanbul Convention on preventing and combating violence against women and domestic violence, which lists forced marriage as a type of violence against women. Forced marriage and attracting a child to another country in order to force her or him to enter into a marriage should be considered a crime, says the Convention.

One in every three girls in developing countries is married before turning 18, and one in nine before 15.

Improving working conditions for women

As women continue to suffer disadvantages in their working lives, MEPs put forward a series of remedial measures. Companies should ensure a better work-life balance, promote gender equality and be obliged to make salaries public, as ways forward to improve women's economic empowerment in the private and public sectors, MEPs say in a draft resolution to be discussed on Monday and put to a vote on Tuesday.

MEPs recommends a number of measures:

- better work-life balance to enable a fairer distribution of unpaid work between men and women;
- pay parity and increase pay transparency in private companies;
- establish gender quotas;
- include gender equality plans in negotiations between companies and social partners;
- ensure that the principle of equal pay for work of equal value is applied effectively by all member states
- raise wages in sectors where women make up the majority of the workforce, such as cleaners and care workers and
- conclude collective agreements and inclusion of equal pay measures in collective bargaining.

Quick Facts

According to Eurostat, 31,5% of working women work part-time, compared to 8,2% of working men; around 50 % of women work full time, compared to 71,2% of men.

Caring responsibilities are the main reason for not having paid work for almost 20% of economically inactive women. Men with caring responsibilities account for only 2% of economically inactive men.

According to EIGE (the European Institute for Gender Equality), improving gender equality would generate up to 10.5 million additional jobs by 2050 in the EU, and increase the EU GDP per capita by some 6.1 to 9.6 %.

Update on Moldova

The latest political and economic developments in Moldova and its commitment to pro-EU reforms will be debated with EU foreign policy chief Federica Mogherini on Tuesday and wrapped up in a resolution to be voted at a later stage.

Moldova is an EU Eastern Partnership country, which has benefitted from visa-free access to the EU since April 2014. The EU is Moldova's key trading partner, taking 63% of its exports (2016).

On 4 July 2017, MEPs gave the green light to €100 million in macro-financial assistance to Moldova, to support its recovery from economic and political turmoil. However Moldova will have to ensure effective democratic mechanisms, respect for the rule of law and human rights in order to get this aid.

COP23: MEPs to press EU to ratchet up its climate goals

The EU should have zero emissions by 2050 and should put a strategy in place before the end of next year to achieve this.

A resolution to be put to the vote on Wednesday sets out recommendations to EU institutions and countries for the November COP23 meeting in Bonn. MEPs call on EU leaders to give effect to the agreement in EU law, ratchet up the EU's climate protection goals and upgrade its environment policy instruments.

As all UNFCCC parties must state their long-term targets by 2020, MEPs also call on the EU Commission to prepare a mid-century zero emissions strategy for the EU by 2018, with the aim of keeping the temperature increase well below 2°C and pursuing efforts to limit it to 1.5°C.

Endocrine disruptors in pesticides: Calls to veto Commission proposal

MEPs will vote on Wednesday on an EU Commission proposal which would exempt some chemicals from the scope of criteria for identifying endocrine disruptors in pesticides and biocides.

The draft text from the Environment Committee says that the Commission has exceeded its mandate by proposing to exempt some substances, such as pesticides deliberately designed to attack a target organism's endocrine system, from the scope of scientific criteria for identifying endocrine disruptors.

Under existing EU legislation, an active substance shall only be approved if it is not considered to have endocrine disrupting properties on non-target organisms.

Facts

Identifying endocrine disrupting properties of chemical substances through scientific criteria is a first step to reduce exposure.

A UNEP/WHO report called endocrine disruptors a “global threat”, referring inter alia to the upward trends in many endocrine-related disorders in humans and wildlife populations. There is evidence of adverse reproductive outcomes (infertility, cancers, malformations) from exposure to the substances, which could also affect thyroid function, brain function, obesity, metabolism, insulin and glucose homeostasis, it says.

Lorry drivers' safety at border crossings

MEPs will discuss with the Commission how to protect truck drivers against theft, assault and lorry hijacking when approaching and lining up for border controls.

The debate follows an incident near Calais, where a Polish driver died after his van crashed against a road block, raising concerns about the level of security, in particular near border crossing points and harbours.

MEPs will ask the Commission to consider setting up 'safe parking zones' or other steps at EU level.

Access for Bulgaria and Romania to the Schengen Visa Information System

A Council proposal to grant Bulgaria and Romania access to the Visa Information System (VIS) will be put to a vote in Parliament on Wednesday.

The Council decision would allow Bulgaria and Romania to consult and check VIS data, but without the right to enter, amend or delete them.

Parliament said in a legislative resolution voted on 8 June 2011 that Bulgaria and Romania are ready to join the Schengen border check-free area.

As long ago as 9 June 2011, Council concluded that Bulgaria and Romania had met all the Schengen acquis conditions on air borders, land borders, police cooperation, data protection, the Schengen Information System, sea borders and visas.

The final political decision on whether Bulgaria and Romania can become part of the Schengen area, and thus drop systematic checks at borders with neighbouring EU countries, has to be taken unanimously by the Council.

MEPs suspect Turkey of using Interpol to track activists

The detention of two writers with dual Swedish/Turkish and German/Turkish nationalities by Spanish authorities, following Interpol arrest warrants issued by Turkey, is up for a debate with Council and Commission on Wednesday.

Hamza Yalçın, a Swedish/Turkish journalist critical of the Turkish government, was arrested and imprisoned on 3 August by the Spanish police at Barcelona airport before boarding a plane to London. Accused by Ankara of insulting Erdoğan and of having terrorist links, he was granted conditional release on Thursday, but will have to remain in Spain, awaiting a decision on Turkey's request to extradite him.

For his part, Doğan Akhanlı, a German/Turkish writer who has extensively written about human rights, was arrested on 19

August while on holiday in Granada. He was granted conditional release, but ordered to remain in Spain while Turkey's extradition request is considered.

MEPs are worried that some countries might abuse Interpol and its Red Notice system to persecute members of the political opposition beyond their borders. And while some EU countries refuse to act, others execute the arrest. MEPs are demanding safeguards for human rights defenders and legitimate activists and to improve exchange of information to ensure that the principles of necessity and proportionality are respected when following Interpol alerts.
