Debates

- Public hearing - Digital advertising and consumer information

With the digital revolution and in particular the ever growing online shopping sector, users of websites, online platforms and social media are often subject to targeted advertising that can influence their choice and constitute profiling. While advertising via traditional channels has to abide by strict rules, digital advertisement is vastly unregulated. This has led to e.g. children being exposed to unsuitable advertisement or to social media in particular being used to promote counterfeit products.

The aim of this event is to hear academia and stakeholders’ views, both from the business side and from organisations dealing with consumer protection, on how consumers are informed and if they have a choice when it comes to online profiling (panel 1), as well as if consumers and especially vulnerable groups are protected from disguised digital advertising (panel 2).
