Paragraph 78 a (new)

78a. Considers the Troika (ECB, Commission and IMF) interventions in Portugal, Ireland, Greece, Cyprus and Spain to be an attack on workers’ rights, wages and pensions which is destroying basic public services, particularly health (with thousands of people being denied access to treatments necessary for their survival, leading to premature deaths) and education, and reinforcing inequality and social injustice; considers that these interventions will lead to a drastic increase in unemployment rates, particularly among young people, and to a dramatic increase in poverty and social exclusion in these countries, with a particular impact on children, young people and the elderly; deplores the contrast between the violation of human rights and the increase in the number of millionaires and their fortunes since the coming into force of the Memoranda of Understanding;

Amendment

78b. Considers that the destruction of jobs, drastic cuts in social spending and the weakening of social security systems is leaving millions of families without any form of social support, principally in countries where the Troika has intervened; considers the Memoranda of Understanding to have massively rolled back labour and social rights and the right to dignity and human worth, which are enshrined in various national constitutions and in international human rights instruments which the EU and its Member States are supposed to have ratified or be linked to.
