A day in the life of a Scottish MEP

The European Parliament (EP) is the only directly-elected body of the European Union (EU). It represents you as an EU citizen together with over 500 million inhabitants in the 28 EU Member States. The 751 Members of the EP (MEPs) not only play a key role in electing the President of the European Commission, they also share powers over the EU budget and legislation with the Council of the European Union (representatives of the EU Member State governments). The approval of the EP is required for most international agreements concluded by the EU and the EP takes its role as a guardian of liberties, human rights and democracy, both in Europe and across the world very seriously.

The EP is a unique example of multi-national and multi-lingual democracy at work. The elected MEPs engage in public debates and play a crucial role in shaping the laws and policies of the EU. The EP decides on EU laws that affect many aspects of daily life in Scotland: from working conditions and air quality to food safety and immigration. It also makes decisions about how the EU's £100 billion yearly budget is spent and has responsibility for making sure it is spent properly. MEPs are elected once every five years by voters right across the EU. The latest election was in May 2014; the next one is planned for May 2019.

The UK has 73 MEPs and six of them represent Scotland. Scotland's MEPs are involved in the budgetary and law-making work of the European Parliament, but they do much else besides. By describing a 'day in the life' of each of the six Scottish MEPs, this booklet tries to give you a flavour of exactly what your MEPs do.

The European Parliament Office in Edinburgh

The European Parliament has an Information Office in the national capitals of all 28 EU Member States. Since 1999, it has also opened smaller 'branch' offices in the larger Member States, in Barcelona, Edinburgh, Marseilles, Milan, Munich and Wrocław.

The European Parliament Office in Edinburgh aims to help increase awareness of the Parliament and the impact of its activities in Scotland, as well as highlighting the work of the six Scottish Members of the European Parliament (MEPs).

What does the European Parliament Information Office in Edinburgh do?

- provides information on the European Parliament's work to the general public
- promotes public awareness of the European Parliament's role in the drafting, adaptation and oversight of EU law and policy
- promotes contacts between the European Parliament and Scottish public authorities
- informs and cooperates with civic society in Scotland

- produces a number of information materials, many of which are available to order free of charge
- responds to queries about the European Parliament to members of the public and journalists as well as to a range of private, public and voluntary sector organisations
- provides a number of educational resources on EU matters for teachers of both primary and secondary pupils
- assists and advises the European Parliament and its United Kingdom Office in matters relating to Scotland

The EP Office has three members of staff and is open 9am-5:30pm, Monday to Thursday and 9am-1:30pm on Friday.

The Office is located in the Old Town of Edinburgh, adjacent to the Scottish Parliament at Holyrood.

Ian Hudghton MEP Scottish National Party

One thing is clear about a day in the life of an MEP - no two days are the same! MEPs typically spend the working week in Brussels, three weeks per month, and have to spend one week at a plenary session in Strasbourg twelve times per year. Additionally we have a constituency to look after. Scotland is one constituency for the purpose of electing six MEPs.

A typical working day in Brussels for me would involve a morning meeting/briefing, such as one recently hosted by Scotland Europa. This kind of event is a good opportunity to promote Scotland's SMEs in Europe and discuss effective ways for Scottish businesses to have their voice heard in Brussels.

Committee meetings normally run from 9:00-12:30 pm and then from 3:00-06:30 pm. I am a member of the Fisheries Committee and the Delegation for relations with Japan.

Committees now operate largely under the co-decision procedure which means that the input of MEPs - the only directly elected part of the EU's decision-making framework - ranks equally with the 28 member state governments in the Council of Ministers.

Recently the Fisheries Committee has been debating the proposed prohibition on driftnet fisheries. This proposal by the Commission completely ignores the principle of regionalisation which is part of the new CFP and I have been strongly demanding a re-think.

We have frequent visitors in Brussels representing NGOs, trade organisations, local government, academic institutions as well as individuals who wish to speak to MEPs about their views on directives and regulations being considered in the European Parliament. Recently I have met with the British Medical Association, student groups from Dundee and Aberdeen, Shetland Fishermen's Association and UK oil and gas representatives.

At the end of a long day in committee meetings there will be a stack of correspondence to be dealt with in the Brussels office.

Within Scotland I travel extensively to meet with people and organisations to listen to their views. I also accept, as often as possible, invitations to speak and answer questions at primary schools, secondary schools and colleges who are studying the European Union and its complex democratic processes.

Biography

Ian Hudghton was first elected to the European Parliament in a 1998 by-election, following the death of Dr Allan Macartney. Ian sat alongside SNP MEP Winnie Ewing until her election to the Scottish Parliament in 1999. Prior to this Ian had served as one of Scotland's four members of the EU Committee of the Regions. An active member of the SNP since joining Forfar Branch in 1967, Ian was elected to the SNP controlled Angus District Council in 1986, serving eight years as Housing Convener.

From 1994-96 he was Depute Leader of the minority SNP administration in Tayside Regional Council. In 1996 Ian became full-time Leader of Angus Council, prior to which he ran a decorating business for over twenty years. He is married with a son and daughter.

In the 1999 European elections Ian headed the SNP list, and at each Euro-election since, members have voted in Ian's favour to head the Party's list of candidates for the Euro-elections. Ian was elected President of the Scottish National Party at the Party's Annual Conference in September 2005 and has since been re-elected at each successive Annual Conference.

In July 2014 Ian was elected Vice-President of the European Free Alliance, part of the 50 member Greens/EFA Group, the 6th largest political group in the European Parliament. He currently serves on the Fisheries, and Economic and Monetary Affairs Committee, using every opportunity to highlight the benefits which independent nation status for Scotland would bring!

David Martin MEP

Labour Party

My work is mainly divided between committee meetings in Brussels and constituency work in Scotland. Representing over 5 million people throughout Scotland means I deal with a wide variety of issues. At the European level we are working on a huge number of issues which directly affect the lives of Scots, from strengthening workers' employment rights, working towards strong environment standards and supporting regional development to eradicating poverty, completing the single market and allowing people to live, work and travel freely throughout Europe, and for businesses to trade throughout the EU. I typically spend three or four days a week working in the Parliament in Brussels and the rest working in Scotland. During a typical day in Scotland I meet constituents, trade unions, NGOs and businesses from all over the country to hear their views on European legislation and to see the projects which have been supported with European funding.

In Brussels, MEPs sit in committees to debate legislation. I sit on the International Trade Committee, the Human Rights Subcommittee and the Foreign Affairs Committee. I was elected as the coordinator of the International Trade Committee to coordinate the work on trade policy by all 191 Socialist and Democrat MEPs. Each committee meeting lasts three and half hours, with one meeting held in the morning and another in the afternoon. In committee, we debate and amend legislation proposed by the Commission.

Recently I have worked on legislation to ban the export of goods from the EU to other countries where there is a risk they will be used for torture. I have also been involved in legislation on conflict minerals to prevent companies exploiting workers to mine precious minerals in conflict zones. In the Human Rights Committee, I have been working on a new tool that helps grassroots human rights organisations in countries with authoritarian governments to gain easier access to funding.

Once the relevant committee has voted and accepted a proposal, a vote is taken by the whole Parliament. This occurs roughly once a month in Strasbourg, France, where 751 MEPs, 28 member states and 24 official languages come together to debate and vote on issues which affect a European population of over 500 million. It's quite a sight. Days in Strasbourg can be long, with debates sometimes running until midnight, but it is one of the most rewarding parts of my job – voting on legislation which will have a direct and positive influence on the Scottish people.

In addition to my committee work I was recently appointed as the EU's Chief Election Observer for the elections in Burundi, following my previous experience as Chief Observer in Jordan (2013) and Tanzania (2010). The EU is one of the most respected observers of elections in the world. Several EU institutions work constructively with governments, opposition parties, civil society groups and other international observers to try to ensure elections are held under transparent, peaceful, credible and fair conditions.

Biography

David Martin has been a Member of the European Parliament since 1984, was Vice President (1989 - 2004) and latterly Senior Vice-President of the European Parliament with special responsibility for relations with national parliaments and parliaments of constitutional Regional Assemblies (e.g. the Scottish Parliament in the UK).

He is a member of the European Parliament Committees on International Trade and Human Rights and a substitute on the Foreign Affairs Committee. He is also a full member of both the Delegation to the Cariforum and the Delegation for Relations with the Countries of Southeast Asia and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, and is a substitute for the Delegation to the African Caribbean and Pacific Joint Parliamentary Assembly. He is a former Regional Councillor for the Scottish region of Lothian, and a former leader of the British Labour MEPs 1987-88. David is a Hibs supporter and a keen runner.

Baroness Mobarik MEP Conservatives Party

One thing that Brussels and Glasgow have in common is the weather. There is always plenty of variety which neatly sums up my days as a Member of the European Parliament for Scotland. No matter how early you start or how late you finish, there never seems to be enough hours in a day.

MEPs spend around 3 weeks a month in Brussels dealing with committee work and another week in Strasbourg where plenary takes place. This is when we vote on all the legislation which has been passed through our committee work in Brussels. Then, scattered throughout the year are constituency weeks where I am able to go out and about meeting all sorts of people and organisations - this really allows me to link my work in Scotland and Brussels together.

A typical day in Brussels will start early. Today started at 8am with a working breakfast for UK Conservative MEPs at the British Embassy. The purpose of the meeting was to receive an update from the British Ambassador to the EU, His Excellency Sir Tim Barrow, and Minister for the Department for Exiting the European Union, Lord Callanan.

Brexit is the single most important issue on the agenda for UK MEPs and it will stay this way until we leave the European Union in 2019. Despite MEPs not having a formal role in the Brexit negotiations people expect us to be up to speed and trying our best to inform the negotiations - in both Britain and the European Union. The European Parliament will have a vote on the United Kingdom's exit deal and is regularly scrutinising the negotiations in Brussels and Strasbourg. Meetings such as these with the British Government really allows us to be on top of our briefs and do our best to represent the country's interests in the Parliament.

On this occasion my colleague and I had to leave the meeting slightly early to make votes on the Internal Market & Consumer Protection Committee (IMCO). Before legislation can move on to be voted on by the entire Parliament it firstly needs the green light in committee. In the European Parliament I am a member of IMCO, the Fisheries (PECH), and the Human Rights Committees (DROI).

IMCO was a natural fit having worked all my life in business and I wanted to join PECH because it is such an important sector to Scotland. Human Rights is something I have been passionate about for many years and I firmly believe if you have a public platform to speak up for human rights then you should use it.

After votes in IMCO it was straight to the office to pick up with my staff. I have two parliamentary assistants in Brussels. Without them I simply would not be able to manage the hundreds of emails I receive every day, meet my committee commitments and prepare for plenary in Strasbourg. A quick morning meeting allows me to catch up on the day's events and diary commitments. On the agenda for the rest of today: a meeting in DROI on the continuing plight of the Rohingya people, a meeting with Fisheries Adviser,

Somewhere in between I managed to grab a quick sandwich!

Following DROI where we discussed what the European Union could be doing about the ongoing atrocities against the Rohingya people in Myanmar I had a much more encouraging meeting with Caroline on fisheries. Caroline has been following a new plan for the management of fish stocks in the North Sea and was updating me on its legislative process which is soon coming to an end. We are working hard for a good outcome for Scottish fishermen. Then I met with Cameron to discuss the speech I would be giving later on in the afternoon on the Digital Gateway File I am following on behalf of my political group – the European Conservatives & Reformists.

This evening I had the opportunity to meet the Ambassador of Qatar to the EU. It was an interesting evening and one of the privileges of being a politician is the chance to meet so many fascinating people. We discussed current events in the Middle East.

All in all it has been a productive day. I am now at home and ready to switch off to do it all again tomorrow.

It you ever wish to get in touch about anything at all I would be delighted to hear from you. Please email me at Nosheena.Mobarik@europarl.europa.eu.

Biography

Born in Pakistan in 1957, Nosheena Mobarik grew up in Glasgow where she studied Economic and Social History at the University of Strathclyde. In 2017, she became MEP for Scotland in the European Parliament where she currently serves on the Internal Market (IMCO), Fisheries (PECH), and Human Rights Committees (DROI).

Prior to joining the European Parliament, she was invited in 2014 to be a board member of the Better Together Campaign and the Strathclyde Commission to look at further powers for Scotland after the Scottish independence referendum. The same year, she was appointed a life peer as Baroness Mobarik of Mearns in the County of Renfrewshire. In the House of Lords Nosheena served as a Government Whip in the departments for International Trade, International Development, Business, Energy & Industrial Strategy, and Devolved Administrations. She made her maiden speech to the House of Lords in a debate on the Modern Slavery Bill.

Nosheena entered politics in after a long career in business. In 1997, she and her husband, Dr Iqbal Mobarik, set up M Computer Technologies, an IT and business solution company. Nosheena's strong sense of public service led her to be elected to the Council of the Confederation of British Industry (CBI) for 12 years, before being invited to become Chairman of CBI Scotland (2011–2013) and Vice-Chair the following year.

Her links with Pakistan have always been strong. In 2008, Nosheena founded the Scotland Pakistan Network to foster greater understanding and links between the two countries. She was then asked in 2012 by the British Government to serve as the Chairman of the Pakistan Britain Trade & Investment Forum and also appointed as the UK Pakistan Trade Champion by the then Prime Minister, David Cameron.

In her spare time, Nosheena enjoys spending time with her family, cooking for friends, reading and painting. She lives in Glasgow with her husband.

Alyn Smith MEP Scottish National Party

I'm writing this from the back of a car in Jaffa, squeezed in between my group colleagues on this fact-finding mission for the European Parliament. The peace process is at a deadlock and the EU is trying to mediate, so this isn't your ordinary delegation. Gingerly opening a page of the diary at random, I can see that on Monday I took a 6 a.m. flight to Brussels to meet with the Cairo Institute for Human Rights, vote on EU-Russian relations and speak at a debate on 'The EU and UK Elections'. By Friday I was back in Scotland for a spot on the BBC Big Debate, and an afternoon of meetings with Scottish organisations. I'm sure my colleagues will agree that there is no 'standard' day in the life of an MEP.

I'm very fortunate to have Scotland as a permanent base; meeting people from different organisations and sectors allows me to not only see some spectacular parts of Scotland, but also provides me with a better understanding of the issues affecting some of Scotland's most important trades.

As Scotland's representative on the European Parliament's Agriculture Committee, I take every opportunity I can to meet with farmers so I can do them justice in Parliament. When Commissioner Hogan asked MEPs for suggestions and comments on CAP simplification, I made sure to open the floor to Scotland's farmers by asking them to email me with their points of view so I could represent them in front of the European Commission.

Yes, it's tiring living out of a suitcase but it's worth it when legislation I've pushed for succeeds. For example, conflict minerals are mined in conditions of extreme exploitation and slavery, yet found in common household goods like mobile phones and tin cans. Instead of the proposed 'voluntary' system, Parliament voted for the mandatory system that I've supported since 2014. Thousands of constituents got in touch to ask me to represent them by taking a stand against conflict minerals. Despite the incredibly tight margins, we won, and it's just one more example of how, by working within the EU, Scotland played a part in a huge victory that we couldn't have achieved on our own.

Biography

Born in Glasgow in 1973, Alyn grew up in Scotland and Saudi Arabia, returning to Scotland in 1986. He studied Law and European Law at Leeds University and spent an Erasmus year studying at Heidelberg in Germany. He graduated from Nottingham Law School in 1996.

Alyn also gained a Masters degree in European Studies from the College of Europe in Warsaw. After a year teaching English in India and working with Scotland Europa in Brussels, Alyn moved to London where he qualified as a lawyer with commercial law firm Clifford Chance. In 2000 Alyn moved back to Scotland working first for a legal firm in Edinburgh and from 2002 for Richard Lochhead MSP then the SNP Group at Holyrood as an adviser on European, Justice and Business policies. Elected to the European Parliament for the first time in 2004 and re-elected in both 2009 and 2014 election, Alyn is Honorary President of Young Scots for Independence and a member of the SNP's National Executive Committee.

In Parliament, he is a full member of the Committee for Foreign Affairs, and Scotland's only voice on the Agriculture Committee. He is a full member of both the Delegation for relations with the Arab Peninsula, and the Delegation for relations with Iraq.

Outside of Parliament, Alyn is an unpaid Director of Turning Point Scotland, a charity in Scotland dealing with mental health, homelessness and drug/alcohol abuse. He is also a Director of LGBT Youth Scotland, Honorary Vice President of the Scottish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and an Honorary Member of the British Veterinary Association.

Catherine Stihler MEP

Labour Party

At the risk of sounding cliché, there is no such thing as a typical day in the life of an MEP.

Each day comes with its own priorities and individual challenges. Being a politician is not a 9 to 5, Monday to Friday job. But, having been an MEP since 1999 and with two young children, the hectic lifestyle is something I am accustomed to.

I spend either three or four days a week in Brussels or Strasbourg and the rest of the week back home in Scotland; the structure of my day depends where I am.

During Brussels weeks, my days are a combination of committee meetings, political group meetings and discussions with visitors from national governments, NGOs, academia, campaign groups and many other organisations. The day usually starts at 8am with a breakfast meeting and ends around 10pm after an event, a dinner discussion or, on occasion, a social dinner with colleagues.

In Strasbourg my diary is usually at its busiest. I am in meetings, working groups, giving speeches and observing debates from 8am and often do not leave the Parliament until after 10pm. It is in Strasbourg that we vote as a Parliament on legislation, one of the most important aspects of our work. As whip for the UK Labour delegation, Strasbourg weeks are particularly busy for me as I discuss our position on all the files to be voted on with my colleagues.

Constituency weeks vary greatly. Representing the whole of Scotland means I travel a lot. I do everything from discussing digital skills in the Highlands to speaking to school pupils in the Borders. I also have huge amounts of paperwork to deal with in relation to enquiries from constituents and accounts for my office in Inverkeithing.

Regardless of where I am, there is also the matter of the several hundred emails I receive each day. I receive so many meeting requests that I cannot accept them all so work with my team to prioritise those which are of particular relevance to Scotland. I am Vice Chair of the Internal Market and Consumer Protection Committee as well as a substitute member of the Economic and Monetary Affairs Committee, both of which cover issues which really matter to the people of Scotland.

The work of the European Parliament is more relevant to the people of Scotland than many realise. In my committees we cover everything from the cost of using your mobile phone abroad to safety standards for gas appliances. A major priority for me this parliamentary term is to see concrete action to end the digital divide.

The life of an MEP is busy and never boring. My diary fills up months in advance and one of the best parts of my job is working together with colleagues from across the EU as well as concerned constituents, industry representatives and national experts.

Biography

Catherine Stihler was elected in 1999 and has proved herself as a strong and committed campaigner, innately pro-European whilst never being afraid to stand up for what's best for Scotland.

Born in Bellshill, on July 30, 1973, Catherine was educated at Coltness High School, Wishaw and St Andrews University, where she was awarded an MA (Hons) Geography and International Relations (1996) and an MLitt in International Security Studies (1998).

Before becoming a MEP, Catherine served as President of St Andrews University Students Association (1994-1995) and worked as a Political Researcher to then Aberdeen South MP, Anne Begg (1997-1999).

Catherine has performed in the role of Deputy Leader of the European Parliamentary Labour Party (EPLP) from 2004 to 2006 and was EPLP health spokesperson. Catherine is vice chair of the Internal Market and Consumer Protection Committee and is a substitute on the Economic and Monetary Affairs Committee as well as EPLP whip and consumer spokesperson.

As a founding member of the Campaign for Parliamentary Reform, Catherine is committed to transparent accounting of expenses and employment practices, which would involve scrapping double pensions for MEPs and having European Parliament sessions in Brussels only.

In her role as MEP, Catherine has led the campaign for bolder anti-smoking messages on cigarette packs, alongside promoting Scotland's anti-smoking legislation as an example for the rest of the EU.

Catherine was instrumental in winning the fight for recognition of Sudden Death Syndrome by the World Health Organisation and helped to deliver Braille on pharmaceutical products.

Catherine has special interests in consumer protection, economics, education and lung disease.

In her spare time, Catherine enjoys spending time with her family, yoga, movies and running. She lives in Dunfermline with her husband and two sons.

David Coburn MEP

United Kingdom Independence Party

Being an MEP is not for the faint hearted and definitely not an easy task but also extremely rewarding.

It is usually a very early Monday morning start for me at around 5am to make my way to Brussels or Strasbourg by train or plane from my home in Scotland.

Sitting on the fisheries committee and also the committee for Industry and Research entails regular meetings on each scrutinising legislation and trying to secure a better deal for Scottish Industry and Fishing.

Out with committees I sit in the Parliament's chamber where as a member of the only openly Eurosceptic Group in the Plenary where my colleagues and I hold to account and oppose the unelected Commission doing our best to prioritise the interests of British people and the United Kingdom.

In Scotland I have a full time office in central Edinburgh where I am based but also prioritise community engagement and attending public events meeting with constituents from all walks of life such as farmers, businessmen and talking about how the EU affects their lives and how I as their MEP can assist with any issues they may have.

I like to make the most of any free time available and enjoy exploring the various cities in which I find myself, the life of an MEP is certainly well travelled and fulfilling.

Biography

David was born in Glasgow in 1959. He attended the Royal High School in Glasgow before being accepted into Leeds University where he studied Law. After leaving University he served for a number of years in the Territorial Army while at the same time he worked as an art dealer and city trader in the City of London before his move into politics.

David was elected to the European Parliament in 2014 becoming the first UKIP politician to be directly elected in Scotland. He is a member of UKIP's National executive Committee and the party's Leader in Scotland.

He lives in Fife with his partner.
